WMC'04 GENERAL CHAIR'S MESSAGE

HAMID VAKILZADIAN
GENERAL CHAIR, WMC'04

On behalf of the 2004 Western Simulation MultiConference (WMC'04) Organizers, it is our great pleasure to welcome you to this conference. WMC'04 brings together six unique conferences on a variety of topics ranging from health sciences to nuclear power simulation. These conferences offer a unique forum for researchers or practitioners to share their expertise and achievements and provide an opportunity to explore the breadth and the depth of many modeling and simulation techniques, tools, and their applications. The individual conference committees of WMC'04 tracks have developed a program that includes presentations, panel sessions, featured speakers, and opportunities for informal gatherings. We encourage you to participate fully in learning, sharing, and forming collaborations.

This is the third year for the International Symposium on Collaborative Technologies and Systems. This conference, organized by Dr. Waleed Smari and Dr. Bill McQuay, addresses the multidisciplinary nature of modeling and simulation from a diverse group of simulation experts. Organizers of this conference have scheduled several keynote addresses, plenary sessions, demos, tutorials, exhibits and a forum that should have broad appeal. Several of the conferences have been with WMC for many years providing a consistent forum for advancing simulation. The International Conference on Health Sciences, organized by Dr. Jim Anderson and Dr. Meyer Katzper, is offering a workshop by leading authorities in addition to quality general sessions. The International Conference on Simulation in Education (organized by Dr. Arnold Pears and Dr. Chell Roberts) and the Conference on Communication Networks and Distributed Systems Modeling and Simulation (organized by Dr. Taieb Znati and Dr. Bruce McDonald) continue to address time-proven issues in their respective areas. Several years ago the International Conference on Fossil Simulation and Training (organized by Mr. Richard Pennington and Mr. Merrill Quintrell) and the International Conference on Simulation Technology for Nuclear Power Plants and Systems (organized by Mr. Scott Halverson) joined WMC. These conferences continue to bring together a unique and important segment of simulation experts addressing growing needs in the power industry.

WMC'04 is being held in San Diego, one of the world's premiere travel destinations that is well known for its climate and scenic areas. We hope you will plan to stay a few extra days to visit some of the many local attractions, including: Beaches, golf courses, Sea World, San Diego Wild Animal Park, Old San Diego, many parks and museums, historical sites, theatrical productions, and concerts. Catamaran Resort Hotel, the conference site, is a waterfront tropical resort on Mission Bay that offers excellent conference settings in addition to the fine dining.

The individual conference organizers deserve great admiration for the success of WMC. It is they who work diligently to enlist participants, review papers, organize panels and exhibits, and finalize programs. The SCS staff, especially Mr. Steve Branch, deserves praise for working with limited resources to support and facilitate this event. The hard work of Dr. Waleed Smari, WMC'04 Program Chair, Dr. Francois Cellier, Associate VP of WMC, and Dr. Chell Roberts, Publicity Chair, and Mr. Wayne Ingalls, CD-ROM Chair deserves special recognition. Finally, I owe a special debt of gratitude to Dr. Frazer Williams, Interim Chair of the Dept. of Electrical Engineering, University of Nebraska-Lincoln, for providing me with the time and support for this conference.

We appreciate your input and participation in making this conference a valuable resource and opportunity for advancing modeling and simulation. Once again, on behalf of SCS, its conference board, and the organizers of WMC, I welcome you all to the conference.

Hamid Vakilzadian
General Chair, WMC'04

KIRSTIE L. BELLMAN, PH.D.
AEROSPACE CORPORATION, USA

“SELF-CONSCIOUS MODELING”

Self-conscious modeling is one of the 21st century challenges. Over the next century, a large diversity of models will underlie computer-based support for most of our critical human functions, including education, commerce, medicine, science, and defense systems. Such will require “self-conscious modeling” in two senses. The first emphasizes the need to raise our awareness of the features and the limitations underlying the representations and methods we use to build our models and simulations. We will discuss the progress in developing methods to explicitly reason about the extent to which a representation or method appropriately matches the requirements of a modeling problem.

Once we have the methods to match representations to appropriate problems and to explicitly analyze and compare representations, we then can introduce the second sense of self-consciousness, which is to allow the modeling systems to use such methods themselves. The ability of a system to reason about its own abilities is part of a family of adaptive capabilities known as computational reflection. We will briefly describe our work in reflective architectures as one example of implementing computationally reflective systems.

BIOGRAPHY:

Dr. Kirstie L. Bellman returned to the Aerospace Corporation after four years at DARPA to start up a new bi-coastal research and development center, called the Aerospace Integration Sciences Center (AISC). The center serves as a research and development capability for a number of DoD and government agencies. AISC’s focus is on the development of advanced system and model integration methods, new analytic techniques, and evaluation tools for assessing the impacts of new technologies. Upon completion of her term at DARPA as a Program Manager for the Domain-Specific Software Architectures (DSSA) program, Prototech (rapid prototyping technology), projects in the Formal Foundations program, the large Computer-Aided Education and Training Initiative (CAETI), and several TRP programs, she received an award from the Office of the Secretary of Defense for excellence in her programs. During her years at DARPA, she had the honor of working with Dr. Anita Jones, then DDR&E at OSD, with the Office of Science and Technology Policy in the White House, and a wide range of other government agencies.

Dr. Bellman has over thirty-five years of academic, industrial, and consulting experience in both laboratory research and the development of models and information architectures for large military and government programs. Her published research spans a wide range of topics in Cognitive Science, Neuroscience, and Computer Science. In addition to playing a leading role in the development of programs in the error analysis and evaluation of Artificial Intelligence programs, her group did internationally recognized research in conceptual design environments, software integration and architectures, and ‘enterprise evaluation’. Fifteen years ago, she started the VEHICLES project, an environment for the conceptual design of space systems that incorporates both conventional and artificial intelligence methods. Ten years ago, with Dr. Landauer, she started the Wrappings approach to system integration. Eight years ago, with Dr. Landauer and others, she started extending the concept of Virtual Worlds to education, business and research environments. Her recent work focuses on the use of domain specific languages and formally based architectural description languages to design and analyze information architectures. In this work, she has also been developing methods for modeling organizational as well as technical aspects of complex systems. With a number of academic partners, she is also developing new mathematical approaches to the analysis of Virtual Worlds containing collaborating humans, artificial agents, and heterogeneous representations, models and processing tools. Lastly she has been working on reflective architectures that use models of themselves to manage their own resources and to reason about appropriate behavior. Recently with both national and international partners, she has been applying the above experience and methods to theoretical work and experiments on emotional agents, cybermedicine applications, bio-computation, and “biologically-inspired” architectures and operating systems. Besides her active research and management efforts, Dr. Bellman gives many invited talks every year and is a popular lecturer.

LUNCHEON SPEAKER

TUESDAY 12:00PM–1:30PM ROUSSEAU CENTER

GEOFFREY CHARLES FOX
INDIANA UNIVERSITY

We will discuss some features and trends in simulation today. Most very large scale simulations on parallel machines are using technology (such as MPI) which is not substantially advanced over the last twenty years. Attempts to produce more advanced programming models have been largely unsuccessful — we ask and try to answer why? While the debate between vector and commodity clusters still rages, Grids enable linkage of resources around the globe and allows real-time integration of a data deluge with simulations. This is being driven by new applications that could be more amenable to new approaches. Where will this lead?

Biography:

Fox received a Ph.D. in Theoretical Physics from Cambridge University and is now professor of Computer Science, Informatics, and Physics at Indiana University. He is director of the Community Grids Laboratory of the Pervasive Technology Laboratories at Indiana University. He previously held positions at Caltech, Syracuse University and Florida State University.

Fox has worked in a variety of applied computer science fields with his work on computational physics evolving into contributions to parallel computing initially involving the hypercube architecture. He has worked on the computing issues in several application areas – currently focusing on Earthquake Science. Over the last four years, a major activity has been the use of Object Web technologies to build collaboration systems and their application in an integrated approach to synchronous and asynchronous distance education. He has led activities to develop prototype high performance Java and Fortran compilers and their runtime support. His research group has pioneered use of distributed object and service architectures for both collaboration and distributed computing. In particular the Gateway computational portal was one of the earliest systems to integrate object and grid technologies. The GlobalMMCS project is developing the Web service collaboration model using a Grid messaging system NaradaBrokering. He helped set up the Java Grande forum to encourage use of Java in large-scale computations. Fox co-chairs the Grid Computing Environment (GCE) working group of the Grid Forum and is developing the portlet approach to computational portals.

He is the main editor of the journal Concurrency & Computation: Practice & Experience and recently published a book: Grid Computing: Making the Global Infrastructure a Reality co-edited with Fran Berman and Tony Hey.
